ANNEXATION CARRIES BY 130

MOKENA VOTES IN SUBDIVISION BY BIG MAJORITY

The proposition of annexing the McIntosh subdivision properties lying north of Mokena into the incorporate limits of the village of Mokena, went over by an overwhelming majority, at the special election held on Tuesday. The count showed a total of 147 votes had been cast out of which 130 votes were for the annexation of the subdivision named and only 17 votes were cast against the proposition.

This is a decided victory for the News-Bulletin as the annexation of additional territory to the village was one of the planks of the paper's constructive platform and this plank has been firmly nailed down.

The News-Bulletin was largely responsible for the awakening of the citizens to the need of additional territory if this town is to progress. This paper has been running a series of articles on this subject which served as an educational feature, showing the citizens what development will mean to Mokena. Bringing in new people and the establishment of new homes will mean a great deal for the expansion of the town and give it a healthy growth.

The News-Bulletin is glad that it had the leading part in promoting and planning the good of future generations. We may not see immediate results, but a few years hence will tell the story. The newly annexed property will however, be available for village and school tax assessments by next spring and a year hence, the first village taxes will be collected on same. Thus the village will have a direct return in revenue in a short time. As homes are built the amount of village tax will increase, as improved lots with homes, and other buildings will increase in value over vacant lots. We must look to the future, and be prepared for it, and not only be content to live only for today.

Seeing the need of enlightenment of the voters on a number of perplexing questions, the editor of the News-Bulletin called a mass meeting last Saturday night at St. Mary's hall, and had attorney D. R. Anderson of Joliet one of the best lawyers in Will County come up and address the gathering on a number of very important points. Questions were asked which Mr. Anderson readily answered and it is thru his kindness in coming here and giving us this valuable information that added impetus was given the movement, to put the annexation proposition over.

Mr. Anderson has made a very fine impression here, and his kindness will be reciprocated.

Mr. Anderson sprung quite a surprise on the editor, when he announced at the meeting, that "I would not have come here, but only for Billy Semmler."

Milton C. Geuther New Cashier of the Mokena Bank

George J. Hacker who has served as cashier of the Mokena State Bank for several years, has quit this position and has been succeeded by Milton C. Geuther. Everett Cooper is also now connected with the bank as bookkeeper.

Mr. Hacker is chiefly interested in New Lenox real estate and in developing his property known as the Brookwood Park subdivision at New Lenox and will devote all his time to this matter.

Tinley Will Have Christmas Tree

Tinley Park is going to have a Community Christmas tree that will be evergreen all the year around. A real live evergreen tree is to be planted soon by the community.

Recently a number of public spirited citizens headed by Rudolph Hug got together and raised $100 to buy the tree.

The president of the Garden Club Mrs. Wm. Funk, with her committee consisting of Mrs. J. C. Andres, Mrs. J. Klepper and Mrs. W. B. Combs motored to Western Springs last week and while there purchased a 15 foot "Blue Spruce" from Vaughn's nurseries. It will be planted with ceremony some time during October.

Mrs. Peter Hostert of Orland, Dies

Mrs. Peter Hostert, aged 69 years died at her home near Orland last Friday following a long illness. She is survived by her husband, Peter Hostert, three sons, William, Frank and John; two daughters, Margaret and Mary.

Funeral services were held Monday morning at 9:30 o'clock from the residence at St. Michael's church at Orland Park, Father Wm. Gorey officiating. Burial in St. Michael's cemetery.

PRE-CHRISTMAS SHOWING

A Pre-Christmas showing of Xmas articles will be held at the Tinley Park Gift Shop beginning Oct. 17.

In commenting on the success of the annexation election, F. A. Tooley of Mokena, who owns 11 lots in the subdivision annexed stated, "I can safely say, as will others, that 95 per cent of the success of the annexation proposition going over so big, is directly due to the News-Bulletin."

The next step the News-Bulletin advocates, is that, when the water mains are extended to the new territory, that where ever such mains pass by property where the owners have had to lay private water pipes in order to get village water, that such property owners be reimbursed for part of the original cost they had in laying such water pipes and that if the extension of the water system is done by special assessment, that the county court which handles all special assessment cases, be acquainted with the facts and asked to consider same when special assessments are made.

Another thing the News-Bulletin advocates, is that building restrictions be at once adopted by the village board, so no cheap tar paper shacks can be thrown together under the guise of modern homes, but that only good substantial homes be built so that the better class of people will locate here.

This Should Interest Dairymen

Editor News-Bulletin:-

Perhaps some of your dairy farmer readers may be interested in table of milk prices which I copy from Government report as follows.

Cities	F. O. B. City	At Co. Sta.

Owing to shortage of milk in the New York City district, farmers to lateness of season. Some work cwt. to $3.87 on August 15th last.

It will be noticed that the only district shown in which farmer producers received less than the Chicago district price, is St. Louis, which district is, I am informed, organized under supervision of the Illinois Agricultural Association, on lines similar to the so-called Pure Milk Association, to which some of our local dairymen belong.

The John T. Jelke Co., at Huntley, Ill., bid $2.35 per cwt., for 3.5 milk in September last.

I understand that most of the cows supplying the Jelke plant with milk, are not T. B. tested. The Jelke Co., has usually paid from 50 to 75 cents per cwt., less than the price paid farmers for milk entering the Chicago fluid trade.

New York farmers are receiving eighty-seven cents per cwt., more than paid in the Chicago district.

During conferences held in former years with Chicago Dealers, officers of the Milk Producers Association were asked, why we should receive more than New York farmers were paid.

During the times when we had a strong membership in the Milk Producers Association, our milk price was usually somewhat higher than the average for the whole country. Whereas we are now among the lowest paid producers of the whole United States.

We are now blessed (?) with two milk Producers Associations, one, doing nothing for lack of strength, and the other doing nothing for lack of a common sense plan.

When the present lamentable condition of our own milk producing industry is considered with thought, one can but wonder just how much the Chicago milk dealers may or may not have had to do with the organization of a second dairy farmers association.

Cook County To Pave First Link Of Historic Road

The paving of Wolf Road in Cook County is now a closed incident, for the contract for the paving of this highway from 143rd St., in Orland township to 183rd street which is the Will and Cook County line, one mile north of Mokena, was let Tuesday to Pronger Brothers, contractors of Blue Island, for $244,289.92. Wolf Road will be paved with a 20 foot wide slab of concrete. Work on concreting will most likely have to be deferred due to the season, altho some work may be done yet this fall, if the weather permits.

This marks the first link in the paving of this historic highway from Kankakee to Wheeling. Credit is due to many interested road boosters in Cook County that the paving of Wolf Road has been made a reality. One fact however, must not be overlooked, and that is, that the agitation started by the Mokena Development Association for the paving of Wolf Road from Kankakee to Wheeling, was an important factor in getting Cook County interested in Wolf Road. At the same time it stirred up people living on Wolf Road in Orland township, to the point where they went to the Cook County Commissioners, and told them what they wanted, and got it.

Now it is up to Will County to see that Wolf Road is carried on from 183rd street, south to the Lincoln Highway and beyond to connect with route 51. There is no just reason in the world why Wolf Road should not be paved this way. Road boosters from 183rd street thru Mokena to the Lincoln highway, must now demand that Wolf Road be paved under the proposed county bond issue in Will County, and if this road is omitted from the county bond issue map, then the county bond issue should be defeated, for this part of Will County is entitled to a concrete road, more than some of the rich fellows around Joliet, are who would like to see the county build roads around Joliet, but who don't give a hang for the eastern and northeastern parts of the county. We now ask for an even break from the county board of Will County for Mokena.

Mokena is not on a hard road and there is no reason why it should be slighted. If it has to be, we can show the doubters, that Mokena can put up a good healthy scrap for its rights.

Since Wolf Road is an assured fact as a paved road in Cook county we must make it so likewise in Will County. Let all get in the band wagon and work toward attaining this end.

Joliet to Entertain Welfare Convention

How the deaf are taught to speak the blind to read, and the insane restored to normal, will be demonstrated at the Illinois conference on public welfare to be held at Joliet next week, beginning Monday, Oct. 17, and closing Friday Oct. 21.

All persons in Will County are especially urged to attend the conference as it may be the only opportunity many will have to see for themselves what progress is being made in welfare work.

Exhibits and demonstrations can be seen at the Joliet Chamber of Commerce Monday and Tuesday, when open house will be maintained for the public.

A band made up entirely of persons devoid of hearing the second organization of its kind in the world will play several concerts, and another featured musical event will be the hobo band made up of World War veterans now patients in the state institution at Jacksonville. This band is a vaudeville bill in itself.

How the blind are taught to read will be demonstrated by state teachers and pupils and the Braille music by which the sightless children are taught to sing, and the maps by which they are taught geography, will be made in the presence of the audience.

Tuesday evening at the High School Horace J. Bridges will address an open meeting on the subject, "The World Is Growing Better."

There will be another public meeting at the high school Thursday night at which Jane Adams of Hull House fame, will be the speaker.

All phases of welfare work will be shown and discussed at the conference, health work, juvenile court work, industrial and community welfare problems. The conference this year is to be the largest from point of attendance and number of exhibits in the history of the state organization.

County Judge Ralph C. Austin of Will County is chairman of the local committee in charge of arrangements.

The annual conference dinner will be held Wednesday night at the Chamber of Commerce. President David Kinley, head of the University of Illinois will be the principal speaker at this affair.

Tinley Defeats Chicago Heights

Playing in midseason form, in ideal football weather. Tinley Park ran rough shod over the somewhat lighter but plucky Chicago Heights team Sunday and won their second straight victory by the score of 44 to 0. The fans witnessed an improved team playing a superior style of football. In the backfield, Augustine, a triple threat man starred with his accurate passes, end runs and lengthy punts. The line was strong and well balanced an offence as well as a defence.

Sunday the local team will journey to West Pullman to play the West Pullman eleven on the city park field. The strength of Tinley's team will be tested in this encounter and will have a large bearing on the remaining games with Oak Lawn, Mt. Greenwood, Homewood and Palos Park. A large crowd will follow the team Sunday in their first game away from home.

Robbins precinct 3, Fulton 62, Heintz 38. Groshells Corner precinct 4, Fulton 108, Heintz 62. Tinley Park precinct 5, Fulton 342, Heintz 3. Stehls Corner precinct 6, Fulton 15, Heintz 13.

Road Meeting Mon.

Mr. Howard Gorham who has spent several weeks in Mokena this summer, and who returned to his home in Sun City, Florida, a month ago, arrived in Mokena again last Saturday afternoon, making the trip by motor. While in Sun City, he built a beautiful bungalow and expects to return soon. Mrs. Gorham and son Bobbie accompanying.

Last Friday afternoon in the home of her mother, Mrs. Kate Cooper, Mrs. Howard Gorham entertained the former Moke Camp Fire Girls in honor of one of their members, Mrs. Olive Geuther Stellwagen, and her recent marriage. The nature of the affair was a miscellaneous shower.

Several guessing games were played with prizes being awarded the winners who presented their trophies to the honor guest. Later a ball of twine was given Mrs. Stellwagen with instructions to unwind it, whereupon she found at different intervals slips of paper which told in verse, where to look for the gifts that were hid about the house. Refreshments were served. The rooms were decorated with cut flowers.

New Play Coming To Adelphi Theatre

"The Road to Rome," the new play by Robert Emmet Sherwood, in which Miss Grace George will open in the Adelphi Theatre, Chicago, Monday evening, October 17, has been compared to Bernard Shaw at his best by no less a dramatic and critical authority than Philander Johnson, that sober critic of the Washington Evening Star, who says:

"The play avails itself of every current license and goes a few steps beyond even the latest privileges of speech and suggestion. It is perhaps the first play in many seasons that can claim comparison with the work of George Bernard Shaw at his best.

"The heroine, wife of Fabius, asserts the idea laid down in 'Man and Superman'—that in courtship woman is naturally the aggressor on direct and uncompromising lines. One of the most emphatic charms of the performance is the manner in which it turns a situation which threatens to be philosophically sound into a laughing episode.

"There is something of a reminder of 'Hamlet' in a dress suit, only the process is reversed, as the wearers of the ancient garb in burnished splendor express themselves in the latest and most unrestrained liberties of vernacular.

"The play is a romping series of anachronisms, resting its claim to consideration squarely on the fact that love and humanity have been immutably the same throughout the centuries.

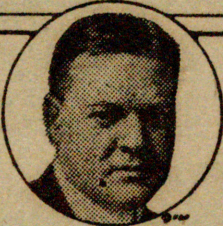

"The auditor may take his choice and regard the play either as a delicious though perhaps indelicate delineation of feminine escapade, or as a colossal satire on the hollow yet terrible ambitions that depend on war."

Smoke Costs Billion Dollars Yearly

"Soft coal contains a large proportion of volatile matter, which if not properly burned issues from the chimney as smoke, containing soot, tarry products and injurious gases. This smoke not only contaminates the air, injures health, and exerts a depressing effect. It also causes large economic losses."

—Herbert Hoover.

Herbert Hoover

DAMAGE caused by smoke costs the average American $15.00 a year, according to tabulations made public by the Bureau of Mines. The damage includes such items as the extra cleaning of rugs, carpets, curtains, household furniture, interior and exterior decoration, laundry, wear and tear on clothing and the effect on stocks of goods in warehouses and stores. To this figure must be added "an enormous but intangible loss to the community through the continual smokiness." The growth of many comin" in order to prevent the complete demoralization of markets for petroleum and its products.

With a continuous oil fuel supply assured, therefore, government experts and engineers see in the rapid rise of oil fuel for household heating a comparatively new and important factor in the nation-wide campaign against the smoke evil.

In response to a general demand for information on oil heating the U. S. Department of Agriculture has tested a wide range of oil heating equipment, and has prepared a booklet of munities has been held back by the smoke evil, it is shown, and for this reason alone "the loss to these towns is incalculable," declares the National Smoke Prevention Committee.

Coal is a difficult fuel to cope with, from the viewpoint of successful smoke elimination. A moderation of the evil is possible only through patient cooperation and educational methods over a long period of time.

It had long been anticipated by engineering experts that the smoke question would become increasingly urgent, because it was thought that the use of soft coal for domestic purposes would gradually extend as the supply of natural gas decreased. But during the past two years the rapid growth of efficient oil heating equipment, with its enormous advantages in convenience and comfort, has indicated that the ideal "clean city" is no longer a visionary's dream, but an immediate possibility.

The relation of domestic heating to smoke abatement is highly important. The smoke nuisance from factories and large industrial plants can usually be curbed by local legislation, but the number of houses and apartments is too great for constant inspection. As Secretary Hoover points out, "domestic or apartment house smoke, although a small proportion of the total, is particularly objectionable because it is produced at low levels and in residential sections."

For the first time, however, a really practicable solution of the smoke nuisance problem has made its appearance, according to engineers. Old King Coal is discovering that he must now share his throne with another great source of fuel and power. Following the annual cry of "Famine!" in oil production, oil has almost literally flooded the petroleum fields of the country and the problem now is to prevent wastage.

Today the production of petroleum is nearly 250,000 barrels a day in excess of immediate requirements. Numerous new oil areas are still awaiting development and a large number of proven oil-producing wells are "shut-information to assist the home owner in deciding what type of apparatus to install. "Heating with oil fuel appeals to home owners," says this report, because of the relief from furnace attendance, dirt, the uncertainties of coal supply and the ease of heat regulation.

Any one of the standard types of oil heating equipment will prove satisfactory from the viewpoint of cleanliness and convenience, if they are properly installed and serviced. Such a furnace is free from smoke; it carries no offensive odors; and its operation is so automatic that the whole problem of heating a home is reduced to a matter of pressing a button. Even the furnace room becomes a homelike addition to the architectural features of the house, and many homes now use their cellar furnace-room as a lounge or den, as a radio or music room, or for billiards and other entertainment.

The general adoption of oil for domestic heating fuel, it is argued, would add many comforts and conveniences to the life of the individual, just as it is helping to solve an important community problem in the conquest of the smoke evil.

In the examination of this dust a microscope was used which magnified the diameter of the particles 1000 times. With this one can count dust particles as small as 0.000003 inch in diameter.

Smoke is actually harmful. It diminishes the daylight and increases bills for lighting. It is injurious to the people who breathe it, examination of the lungs of persons who have resided for a long time in smoky cities having shown them to be blackened by the soot from the air. Physicians assert that soot and dust increases susceptibility to disease and especially to pneumonia.

The smoke abatement problem, as it is reduced to terms of the average home-dweller, resolves itself into the use of some more intelligent and cleanly fuel than coal for heating dwellings.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS ON CLEANLINESS

By FLORENCE SEDER of the Cleanliness Institute

If you keep your soap flakes and cleaning powders in covered glass jars you can always tell at a glance whether they need replenishing.

To prevent soot from accumulating on the bottoms of cooking utensils, rub with soap before setting them on the fire. They will wash off easily.

Leather handbags can be cleaned at home with soap and water. Make tepid suds with soap flakes or any pure, mild soap, apply with a soft brush or cloth, and rub dry with a clean cloth to restore the polish.

White enamel lavatories and bath tubs should be cleaned with soap and water, rather than with rough scouring powders, as long as the finish is new and smooth. This method preserves the enamel from scratches and leaves it white and shining.

Wash black garments by immersing in warm suds of a mild soap. Do not rub soap directly on the material. Plunge it up and down until clean, using two soapy baths if necessary. Rinse several times in warm water, then in cold.

Bathe your house plants occasionally to restore their vigor and fresh color. Place the plant in a sink. Add enough soap to a basin of lukewarm soft water to make it slightly milky.

FLOOD OF PETROLEUM

COLOSSAL production of petroleum is predicted as a result of the discovery of new oil-bearing sands in Oklahoma. The new supply is found at a depth of 6,000 feet, whereas previous wells have rarely penetrated deeper than 4,500 feet. Unlimited supply of fuel oil is assured for many years to come, and prices are now 10 to 20 per cent lower than last year. Home owners who have adopted oil heating will benefit proportionately in their annual battle with Old Man Winter.

Approximately 500,000 buildings were heated by oil last winter. At least fifty per cent more will join the group this year. The consumption of oil for domestic heating will reach two billion gallons this winter, as compared with less than one and a half billion last year.

Salt in Blood and Water.
Human blood contains the same salts in similar proportions as are found in sea water.

DO YOU REMEMBER?

Does This Recall Frozen Radiators and Cracked Cylinders?

In an effort to cut down the huge annual tribute paid by motorists to Old Man Winter, the American Automobile Association is broadcasting the first cold weather warnings. It is estimated that every year several hundred thousand car owners get caught without an anti-freeze mixture in their radiators and that the resulting damage runs far into the millions. Careful motorists already have begun to have glycerine put into their radiators as insurance against the first cold snap. If the garage man knows his job one servicing with radiator glycerine should last all winter because it does not boil away or evaporate.

Tinley Evangelist
Scores Big Success

The revival services which have been held in the Community Hall the past two weeks by Evangelist Henry Hick have been attended by interested audiences. Every one appeared to be talking of the success Evangelist Hick has had in his religious campaign and of the tremendous change there is in him since he lived in Tinley Park. People have been enjoying his talks for they say he gave them spiritual food, some blessing to take home. He is a 20th century preacher, finishing his course in Moody's Institute. He is a young man of clean cut appearance that is good to look upon. His face is fairly radiant with the love of God for his fellowmen that is in his heart. He speaks as one inspired. He could not say the things he does, which are stirring the souls of his hearers and not be endowed with the spirit from on high. Scripture tells us a "man is without honor in his own country" Evangelist Hicks has disproved this; he certainly has shown great moral and religious courage to come to his home town to tell the people of his childhood days, the story of the Cross, pointing the way to eternal happiness in Christ Jesus.

The tendencies of this day and age are full of pitfalls for old and young; we are going a rapid pace; it is like the time of Sodom and Gomorrah and a pity we have not more young men of the type of Mr. Hick who will step out and warn the people before it is too late. The mother of the evangelist has been present at all the services and altho she may not know it, her presence has been a power for strength in the young preacher's efforts. The Rev. Jochum complimented Mrs. Hick in having such a power for good in this son. The Rev. Fields also has been in attendance offering prayers and assisting otherwise. The music has been furnished by two talented young men who sing over the radio. The congregational singing has been spirited. There has been a delightful harmonious vibration over all and it is this that has had much to do in the attraction the meetings have been for the younger generation of Tinley.

The New Year's festivities and the trade were over at Elkwan. The dance in the sleephouse, for which Etienne, seated high on a sugar barrel, provided the music from an ancient and scarred violin, had passed off without compelling the interference of the factor as peacemaker. The customary present of sugar and flour, tea and pork, had been given to each family of hunters and the Crees had feasted and gossiped to their hearts' content, oblivious of bitter moons to come on far trap-lines when, if game were hard to find, their children would whimper with hunger. The last of the dog-teams had jingled up the river trail or down the delta bound for Akimiski. Thanks to Souci, it had been an unheard-of trade which had come to the little post. Not only had he brought across the ice the Elkwan Crees but some from Kapiskau and Attawapiskat, as well. A good joke on Graham and Boucher.

For a week Garth and Etienne were busy sorting and pressing the fur, which was to go by sled immediately to Albany.

"Twenty-eight thousand dollars," said the factor as he finished checking his list. "Our little trips inland after Souci and over to the island were rather worth while, my friend."

Etienne grinned. "No leetle post lak' des eivar mak' dat trade on dis bay. Day geeve you bigger place soon. You tak' Etienne Savanne wid you?"

"Take you with me, you old villain? How could I get along without you? You're responsible for this catch of fur, and you know it."

Savanne gravely shook his head. "Eet was you who tak' de chance on de riviere to fin' Souci. Wen we go to Albanee I tell dem peopl' dat de new man at Elkwan ees hell on catch de fur."

Guthrie stopped to laugh at the serious half-breed. Of the loyalty of his head man, who had taught him practically all he knew about pelts, he had had ample proof.

Down the coast over the sea-ice traveled the sled loaded with the Christmas trade. At Kapiskau, where the early January dusk overtook them, they turned up the delta to the post to pass the night with the surprised Boucher, whose Indians at Akimiski had left him to trade with McDonald.

Starting the following morning under the stars, before the light died, the sled from Elkwan sighted the buildings of Fort Albany.

As Garth and Etienne entered the trade room, Cameron, curious of the result of their mission, called: "Well, well, what's the news from the island? Did you get across the ice?"

"Yes, we got across a week before Christmas, but had a tough time," Guthrie dissembled gravely, nudging Etienne.

"Didn't see how you could do any good going over there. Your man failed to hold any of the Elkwan people, then?" surmised the disappointed Cameron. "Same way with Attawapiskat and Kapiskau—they lost most of their people—went to the schooner. It sure grinds me to think of that McDonald coming in here and taking all that fur."

"Well, he outbids us for it, and it's only human in the Indians to let him have it. How much is the whole island trade worth in an average year, anyway?" suddenly asked Garth.

"Let's see," said Cameron, scratching his grizzled head. "Um, I should say that it runs about two hundred fox skins, all kinds."

"Well, Mr. Cameron, I've got half of it out on the sled, then."

"What?" Cameron stared stupidly into the twinkling eyes of the man before him. "Thought you said you didn't—half of it? What d'yuh mean, half of it? Half of what?" sputtered the puzzled trader.

"Why, half of the Akimiski trade. We got a hundred skins."

"You got a hundred—? Why, man, you said you didn't hold 'em—your people. Are you crazy, Guthrie?" cried the excited Cameron.

Unable to contain his mirth, Etienne exploded at the far end of the trade counter, as Garth replied: "You took it for granted that we failed. I didn't say we fell down," chaffed Guthrie.

"For heaven's sake, man, stop your fooling and tell me the truth. Do you mean to say that you've got a hundred fox from Akimiski on that sled out there?" demanded Cameron.

"I do."

"Well—I'll be—skinned alive!" And the dazed trader stood, fists on hips gawping at the grinning Garth and Etienne.

"How in Jehoshaphat did you do it? You got 'em, after all, with Souci?" "Souci and Etienne, here, scared them to death."

Then, when the fur packs had been brought in and the dogs fed, Guthrie told the story.

"Do you realize, major, that this is the largest Christmas trade ever made by a subsidiary post of Albany? Your scheme and your nerve in seeing it through make the rest up the coast look like pretty dead people. My heartiest congratulations!" The factor of Albany grasped Guthrie's hand.

"The men who turned this trick are Etienne and old Souci," protested Garth. "I don't want you to forget them. I did little."

Cameron slapped the proud half-breed on the back. "No fear of my forgetting Etienne Savanne. He's worked with me too many years. Now I wish you'd listen to what they write from Moose."

The Albany factor went to his desk and, returning with a letter, read to Guthrie:

"The Montreal office has got the idea that this free-trader, McDonald, may be the man wanted in Nova Scotia for a murder committed about three years ago. A returned soldier struck and killed a man supposed to be his wife's lover. He was traced to Newfoundland. According to McDonald at Charlton Island, the description of the soldier tallies with the appearance of this Laughing McDonald. I have written Montreal that the schooner is wintering on this coast. I expect the provincial police will show up here soon to investigate."

"Now, what d'you think of that?" demanded Cameron of the man whose thoughts were centered on the homecoming of a soldier with disfigured face—a face repulsive, unbearable to the woman whose weakness had caused the murder.

"There must be ten thousand men in Canada with scarred faces, Cameron. Because Laughing McDonald happens to have one doesn't make him the murderer."

Cameron sensed that the reply had a personal tinge—was in the nature of a defense of the maimed legions, and said quietly: "No, of course not, but this McDonald sailed out of St. Johns. Queer if he should be the bird they're after."

"How many police will they send on this case?"

"Oh, not more than two."

"I'm sorry for them, then. They'd never come back. Do you think that two men can go to that schooner in Seal cove and get McDonald, if he's the guilty man? He wouldn't be taken alive—and I've a notion that life isn't worth much to McDonald Ha! Ha!"

"Why, you seem to sort of sympathize with this pirate who's stealing our trade," objected the other. The gray eyes of the factor of Elkwan held those of Cameron in a penetrating look, as he said—"I do."

The brooding face of the man with the scarred cheek sought the window. The tragedy of the man at Seal cove, if he proved to be the Nova Scotian soldier wanted by the police, was, he realized, simply the story of Garth Guthrie in an exaggerated form. The wife he had come home to, like Ethel, had turned from the mutilated face—lacked the womanhood to shield him with her heart from the mockery of an unfeeling world. How many of the Canadian maimed, he wondered, the broken, the crippled, had walked in Gethsemane with Garth Guthrie and Laughing McDonald? How many had seen veiled horror in the eyes of those they loved?

"Well, I sympathize with any man whose wife goes wrong," the voice of Cameron went on, after a pause, "but that don't justify murder, Guthrie."

"I'm not so sure," was the quiet response, "when a man comes home with a comic mask for a face, that he isn't justified in killing both his wife and the man she turns to. Put yourself in his place, Cameron. Even the children on the streets must have mocked him as he passed. Think of the hell he lived through—then she, his refuge and his anchor—falls him."

Again Cameron felt that the man championing the unknown McDonald was making the case his own. That Guthrie was sensitive of his scarred cheek he already was aware and it irritated the older man into blurring outright: "Guthrie, don't take offense at what I'm going to say, but it seems to me that you must be vain as a girl to have that scar always on your mind. Why, man, you're handsome enough to carry a dozen scars. Nobody ever thinks of it, except to envy your war record."

Guthrie's mouth curled slightly in answer: "Man, I've forgotten all about that scar, but I can't forget the men who were not so lucky."

But as Cameron's hand left the shoulder of the factor of Elkwan, he was sure that the furrow across the cheek of the younger man had played its part in a personal tragedy.

As Guthrie left the trade house to seek his room at Cameron's hospitable quarters and make himself presentable for the supper on which Mrs. Cameron would spare no effort, he turned for a short stroll across the clearing. He was approaching the mission when the fur-hooded figure of a woman passed him at a short distance on a parallel path. The face in the hood was turned from him but the swinging stride of the moccasined feet aroused his curiosity. The white women residents of the post could be counted on the fingers of a hand. It was a stranger—a new missionary teacher at the orphan Indian school, doubtless. At the mission the paths met, and Guthrie turned with a "good evening," as the woman in the fur capote came abreast, to gasp, with a furiously pounding heart, as he looked into the laughing eyes of Joan Quarrier.

"You! Here?" he exclaimed, gazing at the uplifted hood as if at a ghost.

"Welcome to Albany, Mr. Exile," she cried, extending a mitted hand. "I've just left Mrs. Cameron, and knew of your arrival with that fabulous amount of fur. Congratulations on your defeat of Laughing McDonald."

"You—wintering at Albany," he continued, "and you never told me!"

The color rose to the dark hair on her forehead. "I found a job. You see they needed a nurse terribly, at the school." Her eyes avoided his searching look now. "My brother returns in the spring, so I decided to wait for him here."

"But when I left, you were leaving in a day or two for Moose," he relentlessly persisted. "And you wrote my Christmas letter and never told me you were only ninety miles away," he added reproachfully.

"I—I couldn't interfere with your fight for the fox trade," she replied weakly.

"Well, the fact is, Miss Joan Quarrier," he said with a laugh, "that you're here at Albany, and I'm at Albany, and I hereby announce that I'm going to stay a day, or two, or three, and talk to you."

"I'm sure," she said with a low bow, "that you are most flattering. But you forget that my employer, Mr. Swan, does not approve of you, sir."

"All the worse for Swan, then, for I'm going to see you tomorrow morning, afternoon, and evening, Swan or no Swan. I am a masterful man and will have my way. What time tonight do I knock on the door of the Reverend Swan?" With all his eyes Garth was caressing the face which had come to him by the fire in the snow, followed him over the tundra of Akimiski, companioned his dreams. The miracle of her being here—to talk to—look at, when he had thought her south across the forests! And why had she stayed on in the dreary north?

"I think you could come up tonight." Joan's teeth flashed in an alluring smile. "I'll try to reconcile Mr. Swan to the bitter dose of your presence. He needs me here, you know—finds my experience valuable."

Removing his mitten, with a quick movement Garth slipped off the mitten of the surprised girl and took her hand. "I need you here," he said, "as well as Swan. Eight o'clock tonight!" And walked swiftly away, mad hope in his brain, his emotions out of hand.

Why had she stayed? Why had she stayed? he kept asking himself as he hurried to Cameron's house.

At supper at the Camerons' Guthrie said: "I met an old friend on the clearing tonight."

The kindly eyes of the factor's wife grew quizzical as they met the glance of her guest. "She was here when Etienne came to the kitchen and told us of your success. What did you do to that girl last September? She and I have talked a lot about you this winter."

Guthrie's heart warmed to the inference. He felt the blood in his face, and strove to cover his embarrassment with the question: "How did she come to stay and help that effigy of a man, Swan?"

Mrs. Cameron smiled. "They were dreadfully in need of some one who had training. Half the children had some ailment and Swan and his wife were at their wits' end. I suppose Joan couldn't resist the call, as her brother was to return to the bay in the spring."

"Did you meet him?" asked Garth. "Oh, yes, they ate here several times. Very important person—the doctor!"

"Ah-h!" This from Cameron. "What's the matter," laughed Garth. "Didn't you like him?"

"Like him? It was all I could do to keep my hands off that rooster," growled the lord of Albany. "He made a formal protest in writing to the company to the effect that he had been insulted by you and that you refused to get his stuff on Akimiski, but I told them at Moose what I thought of him."

Garth was grateful to Cameron for his omission of other details of Quarrier's charges, which he knew Joan had scornfully demolished.

"Well, Miss Quarrier is not responsible for her brother. Could I bring her over from the Mission tonight? Swan almost kicked me out in September."

"Why, of course, Major Guthrie. I was going to ask you to," said Mrs. Cameron. "The poor child has a dreary enough time with the Swans. They've been worrying about her soul, you know, because of her liberal views on religion."

After supper Garth hurried over the trail to the mission. At his knock the door was opened by the missionary.

If Garth Guthrie had been susceptible to withering looks from a reverend gentleman whose meager frame stiffened uneasily in the black cloth and clerical collar affected by Mr. Swan, he would have been embarrassed at the chilly reception extended to him when he said:

"Good evening, Mr. Swan! I have come to take Miss Quarrier over to the Camerons' for the evening."

"You, sir," indignantly replied the missionary, "have put yourself beyond the pale—have no right to the society of pure women."

Hands on hips, for a space Garth smiled good-naturedly down on the greatly excited Swan, struggling heroically with the part his conscience bade him play. Then he said quietly: "Swan, if you choose to believe the nonsense with which Quarrier has filled your peanut brain, there is no law to prevent it. But Miss Quarrier has had opportunity to judge and she doesn't believe it. She is also her own mistress and capable of determining her own actions. She is going to the Camerons' with me now. Tell her I'm here!"

The last was spoken with such cold vehemence that Reverend Swan instinctively drew back, fearing bodily harm. But the little man was stubborn. "Miss Quarrier was placed under my protection by her brother. I have a duty—"

"Oh, is that you, Mr. Guthrie?" called a feminine voice from somewhere in the building. "Just a minute! I'm putting on my coat."

"Miss Quarrier," announced the red-faced missionary, aware that the situation was swiftly slipping from his control, "I forbid you walking to the Camerons' with this man."

"Oh, Mr. Swan! You can't be really serious," said Joan, appearing in a doorway. "Mrs. Cameron expects me and I'm sure my reputation is good enough to survive the walk there with Mr. Guthrie." She was talking as one coaxes a child, and Guthrie bit his lips in an attempt to stifle a laugh.

Pilgrims Go to Palestine

In connection with the war memorial unveiling in Jerusalem a large party of pilgrims is journeying on a modern pilgrimage to that city. The war graves and battlefields of Palestine and Egypt are included in the itinerary, and all places of Biblical interest around Jerusalem will be seen. The stop there has been timed to coincide with the unveiling of the memorial by Lord Allenby. The party will visit the pyramids and Cairo, and later will stop at Rhodes, Crete, Cyprus, Malta, Naples and other places of interest.

Gould Credited With French-Fried Potatoes

Like all others who take delight in a platter of crisp, hot French fried potatoes, I always supposed this particular way of preparing them was originated by some eminent French chef in the distant long ago, until along came one of those fellows who are always digging into history and finding things to shatter our pet illusions.

According to his version, the French fried potato originated not in France but in New York. One day, so the story goes, Jay Gould dropped into Delmonico's restaurant in that city and said: "I want potatoes quartered and fried in deep fat." The desire to imitate the doings of a Gould probably caused the use of potatoes fried in this way to assume the proportions of a fad, although, unlike many other fads, this one survived. For years these were known simply as quartered potatoes. Then Delmonico took to slicing them thinner and called them by the name under which they are now known throughout the country.

Whatever may be said of Jay Gould as a financier and railroad builder, all lovers of French fried potatoes are under lasting obligations to this forceful American.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Subtle Rebuke

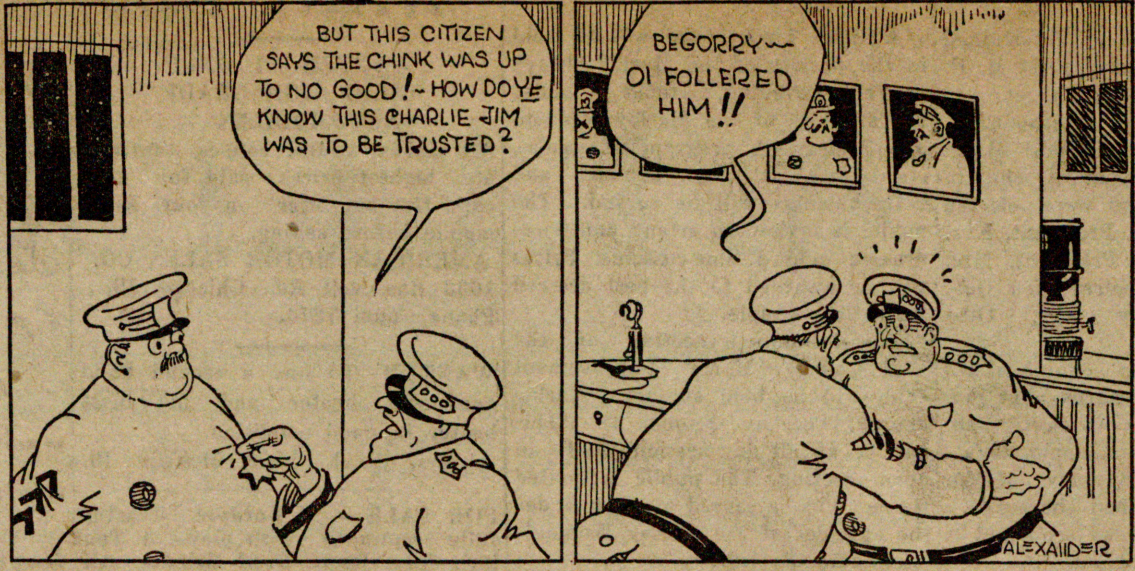

Cupid has shown himself to be utterly indifferent to matters of state and messages of great moment. In 1777 James Wilkinson, who later became a general in the United States army, was an aide to Gen. Horatio Gates and by him was sent to congress at Yorktown in Pennsylvania with the dispatches giving an account of the surrender of Gen. John Burgoyne and the British army at Saratoga. On the way Wilkinson stopped to spend a whole day with his sweetheart at Reading. When he finally delivered the dispatches and they were read in congress, a measure was introduced to reward the messenger who brought such pleasing news. Gov. Samuel Adams thereupon, with grave and solemn face, moved that the young man be presented with a pair of spurs.—Kansas City Star.

Feeling the Scandalmongers

Put it out of the power of any one truly to report you not to be a sincere or a good man; let your practice give the lie; that is all very feasible, for, pray, who can hinder you from being just or sincere?
